Frequently Asked Questions

Isn't the exterior water service line the Utility Company's responsibility until it connects to my house?

- NO. The water service line is the homeowner's responsibility from the water meter until it connects to your home

Can I decline water loss protection and take my chances?

- YES. You do not have to take advantage of ServLine. You may decline protection at any time with a quick phone call
- If you decline protection you will now be responsible for all excess water charges from a line leak. ServLine replaces our existing leak adjustment policy
- *It would take decades of monthly charges of Water Loss Protection to pay for only one excess water bill of $1000

Doesn't my Homeowners Insurance cover damage to my exterior service lines?

- NO. With rare exceptions. Most homeowners insurance policies do NOT cover the exterior service lines. But good news, with ServLine you do not file a homeowners insurance claim or pay a deductible
- The chance of a water line repair is approximately the same as a collision claim against your automobile insurance

Is there a waiting period for ServLine's protection to take effect?

- YES. Unless you accept protection when applying for a new water service connection or have transferred service to a new residence, protection has a 30 day waiting period

I received information about a warranty program in the mail. Is this the same program?

- NO. This is not a warranty product or backed by a warranty company
- Warranty companies are NOT regulated at all in many areas, as a result, they are not held to the same standards as insurance companies. Our service line program is unique and is not like any program you may have seen before
- The ServLine program covers more with fewer restrictions than any warranty program we have seen.
- ServLine's provider is regulated by the State Department of Insurance, unlike warranties
